MARKET COMMENTARY

The Aussie market had a low turnover volatile flat day as global fund flow kept market from rolling over. The media spin is all about US attack on Venezuela. The endless talk about oil reserves is way off the mark. China, Russia, Iran and other South American countries have been in Venezuela for decades and if the massive reserve was economically viable, they would have done it. Even if US corporates wanted to invest, they will have to spend tens of billions over years and hope the political uncertainty does not bite them again. I don't think that is likely. The attack on gas market is delusional as Venezuela has no link. We are in a manipulated market where things are just random. The attack looks so much more like cosplay than a real war. There was no real defense, the president hung around for a few hours to get caught and they even took his wife. None of these things are normal to previous similar efforts. It supports the view that it was a negotiated play made to look like a war. And then US rejected handing over to the opposition and now even walking back how they have control. Like Iran, it's looking more like cosplay. It may be different this time!

CNBC – US and Venezuela > U.S. Secretary of State Marco Rubio on Sunday appeared to backtrack on President Donald Trump's claim that the U.S. will "run" Venezuela after US forces on Saturday captured Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro and hauled him to the US. Asked for details on how the U.S. plans to run Venezuela, Rubio said the U.S. would use leverage gained from its oil blockade on the country and regional military buildup to achieve its policy aims. He did not say the U.S. would directly govern Venezuela. The U.S. in recent months has seized tankers associated with the country and moved military ships and warplanes into the Caribbean. "What's going to happen here is we have a quarantine on their oil, that means their economy will not be able to move forward until the conditions that are in the national interest of the United States and the interests of the Venezuelan people are met, and that's what we intend to do," Rubio said on ABC's "This Week with George Stephanopoulos." "That leverage remains, that leverage is ongoing and we expect that it's going to lead to results here," Rubio said. Pressed by the host of NBC's "Meet the Press," Kristen Welker, on who is running Venezuela, Rubio was more direct. "Well, it's not running," Rubio said. "It's running policy, the policy with regard to this. We want Venezuela to move in a certain direction." Trump said on Saturday said the U.S. would "run the country until such time as we can do a safe, proper and judicious transition." The comments sparked a firestorm of criticism from Trump's adversaries and some allies, who warned against a nation-building exercise in Venezuela. "We have learned through the years when America tries to do regime change and nation building in this way, the American people pay the price in both blood and dollars," Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., said on ABC on Sunday. Venezuelan Vice President Delcy Rodríguez was sworn in as president following Maduro's capture. Maduro and his wife, Cilia Flores, arrived in New York on Saturday night to face charges related to drug trafficking.

Retail sales in Singapore increased by 6.3% year-on-year in November 2025, accelerating from a downwardly revised 4.4% gain in the previous month. It marked the strongest growth since February 2024. On a seasonally adjusted monthly basis, retail sales were unchanged in November.

Indonesia's annual inflation rose to 2.92% in December 2025 from 2.72% in the previous month, marking the highest reading since April 2024 while staying comfortably within Bank Indonesia's 1-1/2% to 3-1/2% target range. Food prices rose at the fastest pace in three months (4.58% vs 4.25% in November) amid an acceleration in costs of housing (1.62% vs 1.57%), transport (1.23% vs 0.71%), and recreation (1.17% vs 1.15%). Meanwhile, inflation eased for clothing (0.66% vs 0.76%), furnishings (0.2% vs 0.23%), health (1.83% vs 2.09%), accommodation and restaurants (1.46% vs 1.5%), and education (1.22% vs 1.26%). At the same time, a decline in communication cost persisted (-0.28% vs -0.25%). Core inflation, which excludes administered prices and volatile food items, stood at 2.38%, the highest level since May, after holding at 2.36% in the prior two months. Monthly, consumer prices increased 0.64%, a sharp pickup from the 0.17% increase in November and the strongest gain in eight months.

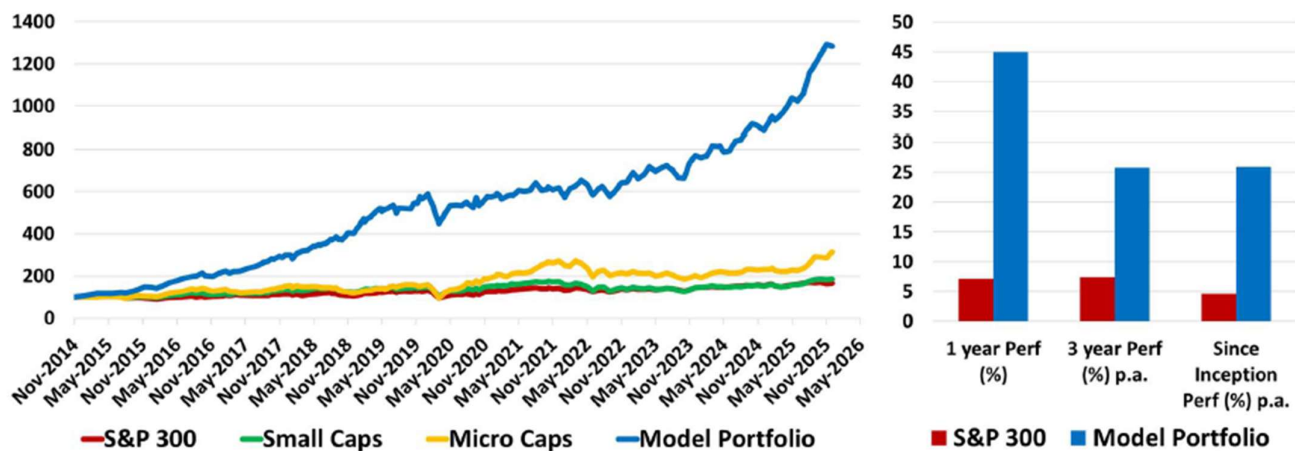

The S&P Global Japan Manufacturing PMI was revised higher to 50.0 in December 2025 from a preliminary estimate of 49.7 and a final reading of 48.7 in November, indicating stable business conditions and ending five months of deterioration. The latest reading also marked its highest level since June, as output was broadly stable while new orders fell at the softest rate since May 2024. New export orders shrank at a slightly slower and modest pace. Employment rose marginally, the strongest increase in four months, supported by expectations of stronger customer demand in the months ahead. Purchasing activity declined at the slowest pace in six months, while vendor performance deteriorated modestly, amid reports of material shortages. On prices, input cost inflation accelerated to an eight-month high due to higher raw material and labour costs. As a result, selling prices rose solidly. Lastly, business sentiment weakened but remained above the survey's long-run average.

The RatingDog China General Services PMI edged down to 52.0 in December 2025 from 52.1 in November, in line with market expectations. The latest reading marked the softest expansion in the services sector since June, as new orders and business activity grew at their weakest pace in six months due to a renewed decline in foreign sales amid reports of reduced tourist numbers. Meanwhile, employment declined for the fifth consecutive month, with firms shedding both full-time and part-time workers due to cost concerns and company restructuring plans. Regarding prices, input costs rose modestly, driven by higher raw material prices. While modest, the rate of inflation was among the highest seen in 2025. However, firms reduced selling prices amid greater market competition. Lastly, business sentiment improved to a nine-month high, supported by optimism over forecasts of stronger market conditions and business expansion plans. However, confidence remained below the survey's long-run average.

The RatingDog China General Composite PMI inched up to 51.3 in December 2025 from November's four-month low of 51.2, marking a seventh consecutive month of expansion in private-sector activity. The modest improvement was supported by stronger services activity alongside a renewed increase in factory output. Total new orders rose, although the pace of growth slowed to a six-month low as export orders declined again, highlighting ongoing weakness in external demand. Employment continued to contract, with firms shedding jobs amid muted capacity pressures and still-subdued business confidence. On the pricing front, selling prices fell for another month, reflecting efforts to support demand in a competitive environment, even as cost pressures intensified slightly.
